A Sermon for Passion Sunday Hebrews 9:11-15 The Rev'd William Klock

April 6, 2025

William Coffin Coleman. He was a travelling salesman. He was in his dark hotel room one night and looked out the window. This was before the days of electrification. He saw a blindingly bright lamp in a window across the street and had to know what it was. He walked across the street, knocked on the door, and found out that the lamp—one that ran on pressurized gasoline—was made by a small local company. Within days he'd tracked down that little company and bought it. That company would become the Coleman Lamp Company and pretty soon those blindingly bright lamps—the “Sunshine of the Night” as they called it—would be selling across North America and the technology would be adapted to lanterns you could carry with you. With a Coleman lamp there was no more fumbling around or straining your eyes in the dim light of a wick lantern. In fact, it'd be crazy to go back to those old kerosene wick lanterns. A Coleman was not only brighter, it was also safer. Back in the 20s and 30s displays would show a table lamp mounted on a rotating arm. Around and around it would turn and it would never go out and it would never start a fire. You couldn't do that with a kerosene wick lantern.

With that in mind, think of our Epistle from the book of Hebrews. Hebrews is sort of like a biblical Coleman lamp display, except here the writer of Hebrews holds up the New Covenant for his fellow Jews and turns it around and around to show all the ways it's better than the Old and how you'd be a fool to want to go back to the Old. Matt talked about this in his sermon last week—although without the Coleman illustration. Last week's Epistle from Galatians highlighted just how tempting it was for Jewish Christians to fall back into the old way—the old covenant way—of doing things. Some of this was that it was simply the life they knew. When they became Christians they didn't stop being Jewish. But there were also Gentiles now coming into this messianic movement. The unbelieving Jews didn't like that. As far as they were concerned Gentiles were unclean. And so these Jewish Christians were shunned by their friends and family and even kicked out of their synagogues for associating with Gentiles. It got worse as the Jews began to actively persecute the Church. Jesus had given these new Jewish believers so much more than they'd had in the old covenant, but it was easy to think only about living for the day. For Jewish Christians it was tempting and it would have been easy to simply drift away from the church and fall back into old covenant Judaism. And so the writer of Hebrews urges them not to do that. Despite the persecution, what they have now in Jesus is so much better than what they had before. The old covenant gave a promise of a new world and a new life in the Messiah. In Jesus, the Messiah has finally come and he's fulfilled that old promise. He's inaugurated the new world and the new life. In Jesus we take part in the fulfilment of God's promises and that's worth it, no matter the cost.

To make this point the writer of Hebrews takes us back to the tabernacle, the precursor to the temple in Jerusalem. Look at Hebrews 9:11-14.

But when the Messiah arrived as a high priest of the good things that were coming, he entered the greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands (that is, not of this present creation), and not with the blood of goats and calves but with his own blood. He entered, once and for all, into the holy place, accomplishing a redemption that lasts forever. For if the blood of bulls and goats and the sprinkled ashes of a heifer, make people holy (in the sense of purifying their bodies) when they had been unclean, how much more will the blood of the Messiah, who offered himself to God through the eternal Spirit as a spotless sacrifice, cleanse our consciences from dead works to serve the living God!

The tabernacle. Think back to the book of Exodus. The Lord rescued his people from their bondage in Egypt and at Mt. Sinai, in the wilderness, he gave him the law, written on stone tablets. At the same time he also gave Moses very detailed instructions for building the tabernacle—the tent complex where the people would worship the Lord and present their offerings and sacrifices.

That tent, the tabernacle, was built to mimic Eden as we see it in the first chapters of Genesis. The imagery used to decorate the tabernacle was meant to invoke the idea of a garden. At the core of the tabernacle, as you progressed from the camp of the Israelites into the outer court of the tabernacle and then into the centre of it was the holy place, where only the priests went, and then beyond that was the most holy place. That was where the ark of the covenant was kept. It was God's throne room. That was where the cloud representing the glory of the Lord rested—God in the midst of his people. But no one was permitted into the most holy place. Sin and uncleanness cannot enter the presence of the Lord. Only once a year did the high priest enter the Lord's presence to offer expiation for the sins of the people.

Sinners cannot enter the presence of our holy God. This is why Adam and Eve were cast out of the garden. But there in the wilderness, as God's plan of redemption began to move forward, he instructed his people to build this tabernacle so that they could once again know him, so that they could live with him in their midst. It was a partial undoing of the consequences of sin. Adam and Eve had once lived in the most holy place, in God's presence. That's what Eden was about. They were to live and to serve in God's presence, cultivating his garden. And as they were fruitful and multiplied, the garden, that holy place would grow—until it filled the whole earth. Because of their rebellion, Adam and Eve were driven out from God's presence. But in the wilderness the Lord helped Israel to build a model of that most holy place, he took up his residence in it, and he gave the people a law by which they could live on the periphery of that manifestation of his glory. They couldn't enter directly into his presence, but whereas Adam and Eve were driven away, in the tabernacle, the Lord now drew his people near. It was the beginning of something good. The beginning of renewal. The tabernacle, the law, the whole old covenant were good things. They reminded God's people of his promise to one day set all of creation to rights and to restore his people fully to his presence. It was a light in the darkness.

The problem for Israel was that in the day-in and day-out activity of living around the tabernacle, of living the law, and of routinely making sacrifices and offerings, it became very easy to forget that all of this pointed to a greater reality and a greater fulfillment. These things were like the dim light of a wick lamp. The tabernacle, the sacrifices, the law were never meant to be a permanent arrangement. The point was never for God's people merely to camp out around the place of his presence, merely to be able to get close to the Holy of Holies. The goal was to return to Eden itself, to return to a life in the presence of the Lord. God and humanity brought back together; heaven and earth rejoined. A far greater light was coming. As Christians we're, too, often guilty of forgetting God's end goal. We come to the Lord's Table on Sundays, we gather with our brothers and sisters for worship, and we make it very routine and hum-drum, forgetting that what we have here is a down-payment on the full inheritance that Jesus will be bringing with him when he returns—of resurrection and new life and of living fully in the presence of the Father.

This is what the writer of Hebrews is getting at when he talks about Jesus as our great high priest of the good things to come. The tabernacle was a good thing, but it pointed to better things, just as the Lord's Supper is a good thing, but points to something even better. And Hebrews says, as our high priest, Jesus entered not in to the most holy place of the tabernacle. No. At the cross Jesus entered into the true, the real holy of holies—the one of which the holy of holies in the tabernacle was only a representation and only a shadow. In his death, Jesus entered the real, the actual presence of his Father. The good news is that because Jesus has entered the Father's presence as our great high priest, since he has made purification for us, we're now ourselves welcomed into the Father's presence as well.

Again, in the face of hostility and persecution, many Jewish Christians were tempted to just go back to the old way of doing things. In their day the temple, the great building of stone on the mountain above Jerusalem, had replaced the tabernacle, but it was laid out on the same plan and served the same purpose. The temple and the sacrifices were good things. Why not just do things the old way? The Lord had commanded them, after all. Why risk persecution by joining with Gentiles to worship Jesus? And so Hebrews reminds them: as good as the temple was, Jesus went to the real place the temple represents. The temple was a model that pointed to the heavenly reality. When Jesus takes us into the heavenly reality, how can we possibly justify going back to the model?

Jesus as our great high priest entering the most holy place naturally leads us to the second point Hebrews makes here about the new covenant and how it's better than the old. The priests of the old covenant entered the most holy place of the tabernacle once every year. We're told here that Jesus entered once and for all time. The old sacrifices were good until the next time you sinned. The sacrifice that Jesus made at the cross is good forever. Why? Because when the old priests went into the holy of holies they took with them the blood of goats and calves. Jesus entered the presence of the Father with his own blood.

This was hard for many Jews to understand. The Messiah was supposed to triumph over Israel's enemies and reign forever. He wasn't supposed to die, let alone die the most humiliating death imaginable at the hands of their pagan overlords. Maybe the Messiah would be their great high priest, but priests make sacrifices. They aren't supposed to be sacrifices themselves. That's what bulls and goats were for. And yet, it's all there in Israel's scriptures—if you know how to look at it. And that's what Hebrews is about.

So, first, the Old Testament sacrifices taught the people to trust the Lord. To offer a sacrifice is to give up something valuable. This is a principle throughout the law. The sabbath, for example, taught people to give one day a week to the Lord. The gentiles scrambled for a living six days a week, but not God's people. The sabbath taught them to trust in the Lord's provision. Think of the manna in the wilderness. Five days they gathered what they needed, but on the sixth day the Lord provide an extra measure to see them through the Sabbath. The Sabbath was an act of faith. And so was the tithe. The gentiles held on to everything they got, but God's people gave him the first tenth—not the last, not what was left over—but the first tenth of everything. It was an act of faith and he provided.

But the animals sacrificed for the people in the temple took things a step further. They reminded the people of the cost of sin. Because of their sin, Adam and Eve were cast out of the garden, cut off from the tree of life. Brothers and Sisters, sin puts us outside the presence of our holy God. Sin separates us from the source of life. Sinners die. The only way back into the presence of our holy God is by the shedding of blood. And that's the second point made about sacrifice here. Redemption from sin requires the death of another in our place. The animals sacrificed in the temple were costly sacrifices, but they were also imperfect sacrifices. They were dumb and unwilling. They served only until the next sin was committed. And they brought the people only into the tabernacle or the temple. For the people to be truly cleansed from sin, for the people to enter into the Holy of Holies would require an even costlier sacrifice.

Those sacrifices pointed to Jesus. In Jesus, God himself took up our flesh—he became one of his own people. He did that so that he could represent them. He became like a second Adam. And so Jesus obediently and willingly gave his life for them—and for us. He was the costly sacrifice—the spotless lamb, the best of the flock. As our representative, he took on himself the death that we deserve. This is why we can say, as we do in the Lord's Supper, that by his one oblation of himself once offered, a full, perfect, and sufficient sacrifice for the sins of the whole world has been made. This is why we can pray that by his flesh and by his blood our sinful bodies may be made clean by his body and our souls washed through his most precious blood. The blood of animal sacrifices gave a superficial cleanness to people who had been defiled by their sin, but Jesus' blood doesn't just make us superficially clean. It purifies us from the inside out. And so we can also pray that as his body and blood make us clean, we may evermore dwell in him and he in us. By his blood we can finally enter the Holy of Holies, we can finally be restored to the presence of our holy Creator.

And that gets at the third point made here—the third way in which Jesus' sacrifice is better than the old sacrifices and the new covenant is better than the old. The sacrifices of the old covenant were shadows pointing to the real sacrifice. The holy of holies in the temple was a shadow of the real holy of holies, not just the heavenly presence of the Father, but it looked forward to the day when Creation will finally be set to rights, when heaven and earth will finally be joined together and humanity can once again live in God's presence, just as Adam and Eve did before they sinned. The cleanness and atonement offered by those old sacrifices was a shadow of the atonement and the cleanness offered by Jesus. Jesus didn't just enter the central room of the temple in Jerusalem to offer the blood of an animal on our behalf. Jesus, who is both God himself and our perfect human representative, entered into the actual presence of his Father with his own blood shed at the cross. In doing that he offers a sacrifice that washes us clean from sin to the very core of our being.

Somehow the perfect sacrifice of Jesus, Hebrews says, purifies our conscience from dead works so that we can serve the living God. Brothers and Sisters, through Jesus we are transformed. Chapter 6 introduced this language of "dead works", but it refers to our repentance from our old pagan and sinful ways and also, for the Jewish Christians, from the obligations of the old covenant and its temple and sacrificial system. As good as those things were, as God-given as they were, Jesus now offers something better. Jesus' sacrifice undoes our sin once and for all. Through him we have access to the presence of God. What we lost when Adam sinned we now have back—or at least we have the down payment of it and hope for its fullness in the future. Jesus washes us clean with his blood and having purified us for the presence of God, he makes us his dwelling place, his tabernacle, as he fills us with the Holy Spirit. And the Spirit then sanctifies our hearts and our minds, making them holy again so that we can serve the living God just as Adam did in the garden. Jesus, by his sacrifice, not only leads us into the holy of holies to know God's presence, but in giving us the Spirit he also makes us—you and me and, collectively his Church—the holy of holies: God's presence in us.

Verse 15 stresses again that this is all and only through Jesus:

For this reason, Jesus is the mediator of the new covenant. The purpose was that those who are called should receive the promised inheritance of the age to come, since a death has occurred which provides redemption from transgressions committed under the first covenant.

Jesus is the mediator. There's no other way. Even the old way—the way of the tabernacle and the sacrifices—that God once gave is now defunct. It's been fulfilled. The thing to which it pointed, the thing for which it was preparing the people, the new thing has finally come in Jesus.

Imagine a frozen river. The first time Veronica and I went to Montréal the St. Lawrence and Ottawa Rivers were frozen. We were driving across the bridge from the west end of the island where the two rivers meet and we saw a Jeep cruising over the ice back towards Montréal. The ice was that thick. You can do that in the middle of a cold Québec winter, but when Spring comes the bridge is the only way across. Try driving your car on thin ice—or try driving on water—and you'll die.

In Jesus, Spring has come to the world. In Jesus a bridge has been provided across the water. The law was perfectly good in its time, just as the ice was safe to drive on if you wanted to cross the river in January, but the time has passed for that. If you want to cross the river now the bridge Jesus provides is the only way. Hebrews was written to people who feared persecution for following Jesus. They were used to driving on the ice and despite the fact that it was now melting and thin, they were still tempted to keep driving on it. Last week in our Epistle from Galatians we read about the Judaisers. They were insisting that to follow Jesus the Gentiles had to be circumcised, follow the right dietary rules, and observe the Sabbath. They still said they were following Jesus, but it doesn't work that way. That's like telling everyone how perfectly good the bridge is while trying to drive your car across the thawing river. The ice is melting. The time for those old ways has passed. Jesus offers something better and his way is now the only way.

Brothers and Sisters, do our lives demonstrate faith in Jesus as our sole mediator? While you and I may not be tempted to go back to the law or the temple or the old covenant sacrifices, we have our own pasts to which we often hold more tightly than we may realise. We profess faith in Jesus, but we still haven't repented of all of our old loyalties, all of our old ways of doing things, all of our old sources of security. We profess Jesus, but we still find satisfaction in sin and in self. We say we trust Jesus, but we still look for security in work and in money. We say we trust Jesus, but we often evaluate ourselves not based on what he has done for us, but on what we think we've done for him. Friends, it's like giving people directions to the bridge, while we ourselves are sitting in our cars with the engine running, nosing our wheels into the water and thinking we'll somehow get across the river. Lent is a time for us to look around, to take stock, and to evaluate our situation. Easter is only two weeks away. It's a reminder that in Jesus Spring has arrived. The river isn't frozen anymore. We need to let go of the old ways of life and follow Jesus across the bridge. Yes, to follow Jesus means challenge and sacrifice, but Jesus is better in every way. He and he alone has redeemed us from death to serve the living God.

Let us pray: Gracious Father, we thank you this morning for the sacrifice you have made in the death of your Son, our Lord, Jesus Christ. In Jesus the price of our sin has been paid once and for all. By his blood we are washed clean through and through. Strengthen our faith, Father, that we might trust fully in Jesus as our only mediator. Open our eyes to the areas of life in which we've failed to repent, and give us the faith to entrust those things to you. We ask this through him, our Saviour and Lord. Amen.
